Diane Mayer, PhD

Professor of Education (Teacher Education)

University of Oxford |

Department of Education

I have had a long association with ISATT, attending my first conference in 1997 in Kiel in Germany. Since then, my scholarship has always been enriched by the globally informed and robust discussions and debates amongst members. I would be honoured to provide executive leadership to the organisation and support ISATT's key goals of enhancing the quality of teaching at all levels of education and providing a forum to promote, present, discuss and disseminate research findings which contribute to knowledge and the formation of theory. To that end I support high profile international speakers and globally-relevant topics and discussions at the biennial conferences and in the ISATT Publication Series. I am an Executive Editor of the ISATT journal Teachers and Teaching – Theory and Practice. Its growth in issues per year and its impact in the international sphere has been impressive such that the articles are now listed in the Social Sciences Citation Index and the journal's impact score is currently at its highest. In addition, I support ongoing opportunities for ISATT to support early career scholars and scholars from low- and middle- income countries through grants, bursaries and regional activities. My goal would be for ISATT members to impact global policy and practice with their research in ways that support high quality education for all.
